Switzerland wishes to advocate a position that enjoys widespread support in international bodies. This is why during the preparations it seeks to involve all interested representatives from the world of politics, civil society and the private sector.

The working group established in October 2012 consisting of the relevant units of the federal administration is steering the process of defining Switzerland's position. It regularly organises information events and carries out consultations.

Switzerland takes an active part in the international process of defining a new set of objectives for global sustainable development. Why don't you participate and help to shape the future?

C'est une position qui à mon avis est la solution idéale. le problème des inégalités ne pourra être réglé que si les causes profondes de ces inégalités. De plus il n'y a pas de solution dans la prise en compte du genre comme problème spécifique, la prise en compte holistique de tous les aspects de la vie et du développement est nécessaire si l'on veut des résultats durables.

We agree with the Swiss position that a stand-alone goal on gender equality is needed in the post-2015 agenda. Equality Now, together with 30 human rights, women's rights and development organizations with ECOSCO status, has submitted a joint written statement to CSW, excerpted here, calling on all member states at the 58th session of the Commission on the Status of Women (the Commission) to endorse a stand-alone goal in the post-2015 Millennium Development Goal framework on gender equality, women's rights and women's empowerment, with at least one of the specific components being freedom from violence. The statement builds on
