

COVID-19 and international health
The international Health Policies Newsletter

For the foreseeable future, there'll be a large Covid-19 section, focusing on global health governance, financing and health systems impact. “

Check out some recent issues here: <https://www.internationalhealthpolicies.org/newsletter/>

The International Health Policies Newsletter

The International Health Policies newsletter, “your weekly International update on Health Policies”, is the flagship activity of the IHP network and provides a curated listing of the week’s key global health (policy) news, events and publications. Every Friday, the newsletter highlights and synthesizes the main knowledge on issues like global health governance, UHC, antimicrobial resistance, infectious diseases, Non-Communicable Disease (NCDs), Sexual and Reproductive Health and Rights (SRHR), planetary health, ... The newsletter also presents featured articles by a network of young and more experienced global health practitioners, mostly from Africa, Asia and Latin America.

Making the most of the IHP Newsletter

The newsletter has four main sections:

1. The introduction (by the editorial team)
2. A featured article (by a contributor from the Global South, usually)
3. the ‘Highlights of the week’ section – i.e. the key news and publications of the week
4. the remainder of the newsletter is divided into thematic sections (such as Infectious diseases & NTDs, NCDs, Human Resources for Health, etc.).

The sections follow each other in the pdf and email versions of the newsletter. On the website, the introduction is featured on the homepage, with the latest feature article and blogs accessible from the links on the right side of the page. The listings can be accessed through the menu above. If you’re on a smartphone, scroll below the introduction for the articles and blogs, and use the menu feature (top right) to access the listings.

If you’re short of time, the “Highlights of the week” section is essential.

You can subscribe to the newsletter here, if you haven’t already.